What did you learn about the workshop?

- there is lots of information to get across and only so much that people can take in.
- Students bring concerns about how they will fair academically out of their participation which also limits how much they can take in

Can you note any ideas for future implementation? * Maybe refer to students as a "crew/team". They have a different role in this project to their usual role. This places everyone on a level playing field - primary, secondary, tertiary students, community participants and facilitators are all here to learn and contribute collaboratively to the project. * Need to remember to stop 20 minutes prior to document the progress

Are there any immediate actions arising from this workshop? * students given homework to explore the well and come to the next session with ideas to contribute * students asked to decide on a geometric shape and concept for their Spirit of the Rumpus wild and come ready to create at the next session * pre-roll some paper ahead of next week's workshop

Can you share any memorable moments or quotes from participants? * some crew members enjoying the things in the well * some crew members very quiet but engaging in experimentation with materials
